SELLING RIGHTS FOR OIL LANDS

California oil locators continue selling acreage in oil locations made under the placer location law believing the U. S. Court will sustain their rights when it comes to a contest. The status of oil locations followed in San Francisco is set forth in the following letter to Rolla E. Clapp, of Tonopah:

"These particular lands were located the latter part of 1919, and before January 15, 1920. Several competent attorneys passed upon, and approved title. It is maintained that Section 37 of the Land Leasing Bill protects locator's title. Further that the ruling of the department on this subject is not a judicial ruling, and therefore would not be overruled by the courts. Because of the plain language used in Section 37 of the Land Leasing Bill, if the department maintains its attitude and grants a permit to such located lands the permittee must oust the placer locator, and to do so he would be obliged to take his case to the courts, in which case there are locators who are ready to go to the highest courts necessary.

"We believe our title valid and are carrying forward our plans accordingly. The man who buys land out of the drill finds the price goes up as the drill goes down. He puts himself in position to make several thousand dollars per acre on land that costs him but a few dollars per acre, with the bringing in of substantial production."
